

General Knowledge

Medieval History

STUDY NOTES

Tughlaq Dynasty (1320-1414)

Introduction

Tughlaq Dynasty is also known as Tughluq or Tughluk dynasty. They took over the reins from Mubarak Shah, the last ruler of the Khilji Dynasty. The Tughlaq Dynasty was founded by Ghiyas-ud-din Tughlaq in 1320 CE.

- Ruled India: From 1320 to 1414 CE.
- Origin: Turkish origin, but closely associated with the Delhi Sultanate.
- Capital Shift: Sultan Muhammad bin Tughlaq moved the capital from Delhi to Daulatabad (Deogiri) and back, which led to widespread unrest.

Key Rulers

- Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq (1320–1325 CE)
- Muhammad bin Tughlaq (1325–1351 CE)
- Firoz Shah Tughlaq (1351–1388 CE)

Reforms and Policies

- Muhammad bin Tughlaq introduced failed experiments like shifting the capital and introducing token currency.
- Firoz Shah Tughlaq is known for public works like canals, hospitals, and madrasas.

Decline

- Internal revolts, failed military campaigns, and economic mismanagement led to the weakening of the dynasty.
- End of Dynasty: Overthrown by the Sayyid Dynasty in 1414 CE.
- Nasiruddin Mahmud Shah was the last ruler of the Tughlaq dynasty.

Ruler and Significance:

Ruler	Reign	Significance
Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq	1320–1325 CE	Founder of the Tughlaq Dynasty; introduced a strong, centralized administration; built Tughlaqabad near Delhi.
Muhammad bin Tughlaq	1325–1351 CE	Known for ambitious but failed experiments, such as shifting the capital to Daulatabad and introducing token currency.
Firoz Shah Tughlaq	1351–1388 CE	Known for welfare policies, irrigation works, building canals, madrasas, and hospitals; revived religious orthodoxy.
Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq II	1388–1389 CE	A weak ruler with little impact; unable to control internal dissent.
Abu Bakr Tughlaq	1389–1390 CE	Brief reign marked by instability and internal power struggles.

Nasiruddin Muhammad	1390–1394 CE	The last significant ruler; faced challenges from regional revolts and foreign invasions (Timur's invasion in 1398).
Nasir-ud-Din Mahmud	1394-1413CE	Nominal ruler with limited control; oversaw the decline of the dynasty due to Timur's invasion and internal anarchy.

Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq or Ghazi Malik (1320 – 1325 A.D.)

- Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq or Ghazi Malik was the founder of the Tughluq dynasty.
- Tughluq's policy was harsh against Mongols. He had killed envoys of the Ilkhan Oljeitu and punished Mongol prisoners harshly.
- He also started construction of Tughlaqabad Fort.
- During his reign, Tughlaq built a stable administration dominated by Multanis, which reflects his native power base of Dipalpur and Punjab, and the means that he used to take power.
- He rose from a humble origin.

Domestic and Foreign Policies

- Ghiyas-ud-din reinstated order in his empire.
- He gave more importance to postal arrangements, judicial, irrigation, agriculture, and police.
- In 1320A.D. he ascended the throne
- He brought Bengal, Utkala or Orissa, and Warangal under his control
- The Mongol leaders who invaded North India were seized and confined by him.

End of Ghiyas-ud-din Tughluq rule

- In 1325 A.D. Ghiyas-ud-din was crushed to death while attending an event for his victories in Bengal.
- Junakhan, the crown prince succeeded him.

Muhammad-bin-Tughlaq (1325-1361A.D.)

- In 1325 A.D. Junakhan, the crown prince sworn the title Muhammad-bin-Tughluq.

- Muhammad-bin-Tughlaq stood for the administrative and political unity of India.
- In 1327 A.D. he captured Warangal.

Domestic Policies of Muhammad-bin-Tughluq

- To fill the empty treasury, he raised taxes in the Doab region.
- Many people ran away to the forests to avoid heavy taxes due to which cultivation was neglected and severe food shortages occurred.
- He shifted his capital from Delhi to Devagiri to protect his capital and ordered the common people and government officials to shift to Devagiri, after many difficulties he ordered them to return to Delhi.
- He introduced the copper currency system.
- The value of coins dropped; hence he had to withdraw the copper token currency.
- To conquer Khurasan, Iraq, and Transoxiana, he raised an army of 3,70,000 men.
- Mohammed-bin-Tughluq's national treasure had a great burden due to the policy of huge presents given to Tamashirin, the Mongol leader to avoid Mongol Invasion.
- Mohammed-bin-Tughluq's domestic policies were good but due to faulty implementation measures, they failed.
- The decline of the Delhi Sultanate is claimed due to his hasty decisions and defective policy implementation.

Firoz Tughlaq (1351-1388 A.D.)

- In 1351 A.D. Firoz Tughlaq was the son of Ghiyas-ud-din Tughlaq's younger brother. He succeeded to the throne.

Administrative Reforms

- He withdrew all Taquavi (agricultural) loans granted by Mohammed-bin-Tughlaq.
- He raised the salary of the revenue officers.
- He brought an end to all unlawful and unjust taxes.
- He collected four important taxes which are:
 - Kharaj- 1/10 of the produce of the land
 - Khams- 1/5 of the war booty
 - Jizya-Poll Tax
 - Zakat-Tax on Muslims for specific religious purposes

- He constructed 150 wells, 100 bridges, and 50 dams, and also dug many irrigation canals.
- He constructed towns like Firozabad, Hissar, Jaunpur, and Fatehabad.
- Firoz banned all kinds of damage and torture.
- He levied Jizya on the Brahmins.
- He established hospitals (Dar-ul-shafa), a Marriage Bureau, (Diwani-i-kherat), and an Employment Bureau.
- He also established Diwan-i-Istibqaq to give financial aid to the poor.

Foreign Policy

- Firoz Tughlaq surrounded Bengal in 1353 A.D. and 1359 A.D.
- He seized Jainagar.
- He devastated the Jagannath Temple at Puri.

Importance of Firoz Tughlaq

- His generous measures and contributions to the affluence of the people.
- Futuh-i-Firoz Shahi is an autobiography of Firoz Tughlaq.
- He patronized scholar Zia-ud-din Barani.
- During his reign, several Sanskrit books on medicine, science, and arts were translated into Persian.
- Kutab- Feroz Shahi – a book which dealt with Physics

Later Tughlaqs – successors of Firoz

- Ghiyas-ud-din Tughlaq Shah II
- Abu Bakr Shah,
- Nasir-ud-din Mohammed Tughlaq

End of the Tughluq Dynasty

- The successors of Firoz were not very strong or competent.
- By the end of the 14th century, most of the territories became independent.
- Only Punjab and Delhi remained under the Tughlaqs.
- Timur's invasion took place during the Tughluq period.

Timur's Invasion (1398 A.D.)

- The fabulous wealth of India attracted Timur the ruler of Samarqand.
- During the period of Nasir-ud-din Mohammed Tughlaq, he invaded India.
- In 1398 A.D. Timur captured Delhi and caused the annihilation of the Tughlaq dynasty by pillaging and slaughtering people.

Contribution of the Tughlaq Dynasty to Art and Architecture

 Tughlaqabad Fort	Tughlaqabad Fort • It is located in Delhi. Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq constructed it. The fort features massive stone walls, bastions, and gateways, showcasing the military architectural prowess of the Tughlaq rulers. • Firoz Shah: Two Ashokan pillars were brought from Meerut and Topara in Ambala to beautify the capital city.
 Firoz Shah Kotla	Firoz Shah Kotla • It is located in present-day Delhi and was built by Firoz Shah Tughlaq. • The complex comprises several structures, including a mosque, a palace, and a pillar known as Ashokan Pillar. • Firoz Shah Tughlaq in 1354 CE as part of his new capital, Firozabad • It served as a fortress and palace complex along the Yamuna River in Delhi.
	Jahanpanah • It means "Refuge of the World. It was a planned city founded by Muhammad bin Tughlaq. • The city served as the fourth city of Delhi during the Tughlaq era. • Though the planned city didn't flourish for long, it

Jahanpanah	featured significant architectural elements such as the Bijai Mandal, a pyramidal structure that served as Muhammad bin Tughlaq's observatory.
-------------------	--

Book During Tughlaq Dynasty

Author	Book	Significance
Ziauddin Barani	Tarikh-i-Firoz Shahi	Chronicles the reigns of several Delhi Sultans, including the Tughlaqs, especially Firoz Shah.
Ibn Battuta	Rihla (Travels)	Describes his travels in India during the reign of Muhammad bin Tughlaq.
Amir Khusrau	Tughlaq Nama	Poetic work praising Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq, highlighting his achievements.
Shams-i-Siraj Afif	Tarikh-i-Firoz Shahi	Offers insights into the reign of Firoz Shah Tughlaq and his administrative reforms.

Quick revision Point

Founder:

Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq (1320–1325 CE); established the dynasty after defeating the Khilji dynasty.

Notable Rulers

- Ghiyasuddin Tughlaq: Founder, known for military campaigns and building Tughlaqabad.
- Muhammad bin Tughlaq (1325–1351 CE): Ambitious but controversial ruler; known for experiments like shifting the capital to Daulatabad and introducing token currency (both failed).
- Firoz Shah Tughlaq (1351–1388 CE): Focused on public welfare, built canals, and hospitals, and promoted religious orthodoxy.

Significant Policies

- Muhammad bin Tughlaq's failures led to economic decline and revolts.
- Firoz Shah's welfare policies strengthened the administrative system but weakened the central authority by granting autonomy to local nobles.

Decline

- After Firoz Shah's death, weak successors and invasions, such as Timur's invasion in 1398, led to the collapse of the dynasty.
- End of Dynasty: Overthrown by the Sayyid Dynasty in 1414 CE.