Film and Entertainment

Introduction

Cinema has always played a crucial role in shaping society, reflecting its values, and inspiring change. Over time, films and filmmaking have become more advanced. This remarkable journey of Indian cinema began in 1913 when the father of Indian cinema, Dadasaheb Phalke, created the first indigenous film, Raja Harishchandra.

- To honour this legacy and encourage the creation of high-quality storytelling, the Ministry of Information and Broadcasting confers the prestigious National Film Awards along with cinema's highest honour, the Dadasaheb Phalke Award each year
- The Indian Government noticed this growth and passed the Indian Cinematograph Act in 1918.
- Nine years later, a committee was appointed to go into its problems.
- The release of Alam Ara, the first Indian talkie, in 1931, marked the close of the silent era and opened a new chapter in the history of Indian Cinema.
- Between 1931 and the outbreak of World War II in 1939, the Indian film industry expanded multiplefold.
- Mumbai became the main centre of production during this period, and innovations in colour, cartoon films and dubbing in English were also attempted during this period.

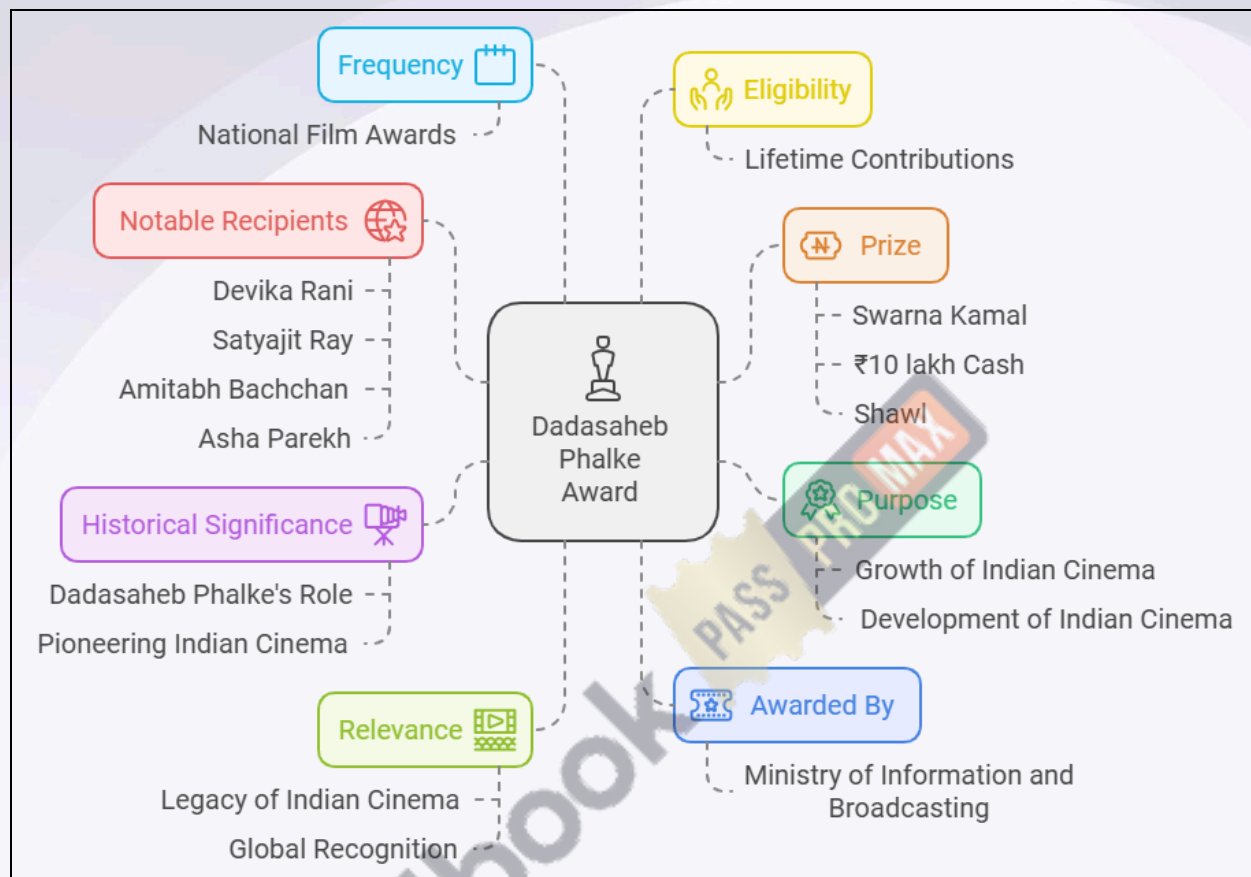

Dadasaheb Phalke Award

- Instituted in 1969 when presented to Devika Rani, the Dadasaheb Phalke Award was introduced by the Government of India to commemorate Dadasaheb Phalke's contribution to Indian cinema.
- Honoured with the highest award in the field of cinema, the recipients are recognized for their 'outstanding contribution to the growth and development of Indian cinema'.

- Dhundiraj Govind Phalke, known popularly as Dadasaheb Phalke, is regarded as the father of Indian cinema.
